

CIDA Announces:

Jennifer Beattie to Receive Portland Business Journal's 2014 Forty under 40 Award

CIDA Architects & Engineers is proud to announce that Jennifer Beattie, President of CIDA, will be honored as one of the Portland Business Journal's Forty under 40 Award recipients for 2014. The award recognizes young professionals that have excelled in their field, shown tremendous leadership, and are committed to the community.

Jennifer was selected from a pool of over 370 nominations for her professional ethos, tireless advocacy for her clients, and commitment to the wellbeing of CIDA and its employees. Additionally, beyond her professional dedication, Jennifer is an advocate for community involvement. She generously volunteers her time and encourages others to do the same. In fact, the extensive work that Jennifer does for non-profit organizations, both professionally and privately, reinforces why she became an architect – she designs to improve the lives of people with the goal of impacting a community well after a project's completion.

During her sixteen years with CIDA, Jennifer has become a respected design professional who balances quality design and excellent service, with leadership and management skills. She became a principal in the company in 2007 and began to assume management and operations responsibilities in 2011, at a time when the commercial construction sector was only gradually recovering. In the two year transition period leading to her permanent placement as CIDA's president, Jennifer began the process to ensure that the company was primed for recovery. In less than a year since formally taking over, the company is growing for the first time since 2007, and ended 2013 on one of the strongest fourth quarters in the company's twenty-two year history.
